

And thanks to you at home for joining with us this hour. Happy weekend. Happy Friday. OK, this goes in an unexpected place but trust me, you're going to enjoy the ride. In May 2008, John McCain had all but wrapped up the Republican presidential nomination. At that point, it was basically just a march to the convention for him. But sometimes candidates hit obstacles in their campaigns that weren't put there by their opponents. It's not because one of their rivals for the nomination or a candidate from another party has hit them with something particularly hard. Sometimes, candidates just make their own unforced errors. And John McCain did that in the spring of 2008 when he momentarily hopped into bed with a sort of high-profile guy who it turned out had very, very strong and strongly stated beliefs about among other things the Catholic Church. That man's name is John Hagee
